

JACKSON FAILED TO GO ON

Biddy Bishop's Smoked Wonder Disappoints an Omaha Crowd.

PAUL MURRAY SUBSTITUTES FOR HIM

Local Lad Put Up Eight Nice Rounds Against Martin Judge and Lays Down in the Eleventh.

The Broadway Athletic club gave its first pugilistic entertainment at Creighton hall last night and the large contingency of local sporting men in attendance was well pleased with the entertainment afforded. The main event of the evening between Young Peter Jackson, welterweight champion of the Pacific coast, and Martin Judge of Philadelphia, was called off because Jackson was suffering with an aggravated case of rheumatism which had developed to such an extent during the day, Thursday, that Jackson's appearance in the ring was entirely out of the question.

Paul Murray, the local middleweight champion, was secured to take Jackson's place and made a creditable showing against an opponent whose pretensions record might have frightened Murray out of his wits even before he entered the ring. But for ten rounds Murray put up a splendid fight and showed quite a much skill as did Judge. In the first eight rounds, if a decision had been rendered, it would necessarily have been given to Murray because of the better showing he made. In the ninth, however, Judge began to evince his superior fighting genius and familiarity with the fighting game, and the close of the tenth found Murray prone upon the floor, where he had been sent by a lambasting left punch sent to his jaw by Judge. He would have been counted out had not the gong saved him.

This incident seemed to unnerve Murray. He came up for the eleventh seemingly as fresh as when he started, except that there was a noticeable pallor on his face. His lips were drawn and his breath came in short, jerky gasps. Otherwise he was in splendid condition. Judge noticed the discomfort of his antagonist and started after him hammer and tongs. Murray quailed under the treatment and a stiff punch in the face sent him to his knees. He was by no means out, but he evidently desired no more of Judge's game, so took the count and jumped lithely to his feet after Referee McLaren had counted him out.

The preliminaries were quite interesting, with four colored boys and two white boys as the participants. The contest narrowed down to two contestants, one of them being Tom Mitchell, the winner of the battle royal in the last fight of the Omaha Athletic club. Mitchell met his Waterloo, however, and quit the ring rather than take the chance of being knocked out by a little colored fellow named Cal Butler. Mitchell asserted that he was entitled to a draw, but the referee's decision gave the fight to Butler.

Jim Popp, lightweight champion of Canada, and "Kid" Reynolds of Marshalltown sparred four rounds and put up a very pleasing entertainment. Popp demonstrated his superiority all the way through and could have sent his man to the woods at any time, but contented himself with giving the crowd a splendid exhibition of his sparring ability. Popp was given the decision.

RUORBACKS OF OTHER DAYS

Character of Those Sprung on the Eve of Presidential Elections.

EW GRAINS OF TRUTH IN THEM

Fate of a Party Often Changed and the Presidency List—Now is the Season to Expect Them.

Toward the close of a presidential campaign we expect all sorts of "ruorbacks." They are generally reserved until the briefest possible time before the day of election, as the contradiction of the original forecast is the more effective.

However unlikely these last reports may be, relates the Washington Post, they are some believers and change some votes. As far back as the election of General Jackson such insinuations, recollections, and anything of more modern times, were not regarded as unlawful weapons to be used in a presidential canvass.

The "coffin handbill," as it was called, headed with five coffins bearing the names of the men General Jackson was to defeat anything of more modern times, were not regarded as unlawful weapons to be used in a presidential canvass.

dates, Blaine and Cleveland, who were personally assailed to a great degree than any previous candidate I remember. It will remain, it is to be hoped, as an example to be avoided in all coming times.

Of the presidential campaigns since that period I cannot speak personally, as I have been but a looker on, and not a participant. Moreover, these latter campaigns are well remembered.

The word "ruorback," which was so universally used in past presidential elections to condemn any falsehood or forgery employed to the injury of the presidential candidates, originated in the canvass of 1844, when such a forgery was published to the detriment of James K. Polk, when candidate for the presidency, purporting to be a letter from the "Traveler of Baron Rooback."

In the days when the state election in Pennsylvania took place in October that election was always regarded as setting the vote in November of the presidential year. I remember how anxious the state was to have the result of the last election of that year. I think ten days elapsed before the full returns were received, and then we were without any mode
